Nicole Jacques was sentenced to jail time for her sexual relationship with a former student.

A Pennsylvania woman who resigned from her job at a Christian school, then had a months-long sexual relationship with a 15-year-old former student was sentenced to jail time for her illicit affair Aug 16.

Nicole Jacques, 27, was sentenced to 11-and-a-half to 23 months in prison on a felony charge of corruption of minors.

In addition to jail time, Jacques received three years' probation and will register as a sex offender, according to PhillyBurbs.com. A judge ordered her not to have contact with her victim, but prosecutors in the case hope the conviction will help protect other children as well.

"[She] engaged in sexual relations with someone who was a former student of hers," County Assistant District Attorney Matthew Quigg told the website. "It was very important that she have a conviction on her record that would make it impossible for her to have a job around children again."

Under Megan's Law, Jacques will have to report her address, her employment and the vehicle she drives each year to state police for the next 15 years.

Jacques was arrested in March 2012 after the father of her victim reported the ex-teacher's trysts with his son to Hatfield County Police, the Philadelphia Inquirer reported at the time.

Jacques quit her job at Calvary Baptist School in Lansdale, Pa., in 2011. According to police, no sexual contact took while she was employed as a teacher there.

However, Jacques continued to communicate with the victim via text message and phone calls, eventually having sex with the boy at her apartment.

According to a criminal complaint, the boy's phone bill tipped his parents off to the relationship. It included 1,168 text messages and 37 calls between the ex-teacher and her former student in the weeks before the boy's parents went to the police.

So you all know, I'm a foster parent.

I once had a 14 year old boy in my care, who had been victimized by a beautiful woman in her twenties. She was gorgeous, blonde, curvy. She had a relationship with this kid for months and months. Because she was pretty, the good-old-boy judge let her off with a wink and a "bad-bad-girl."

There were no judges around when that little boy developed the symptoms for genital herpes, and then had to get on medication. No jail time for her, but he has to explain to every future partner that he has a forever-disease that they can get, even if they use condoms.

He was not old enough to know this was a possible outcome. He was only a child. But he'll pay, forever.

Please. Then someone hasn't educated that boy. I lost my virginity at 14 or 15 and knew damn well what I was doing and the possible outcomes that may arise from it. If a 15 year old isn't capable of making a rational choice such as this than they have other problems in life as they will be on the road with millions of people in a year or 2. People need to stop acting like these are children. Maybe in the eyes of our backwards laws he was, but he should know better just as she should. He was probably happier than a pig in crap.

If that is what she is to you then you don't know what a "pedophile" actually is.

Try Google to see that you are off by quite a few years.

I've been working in education and youth development for over a decade and am heading into my 4th year working as a school administrator yet I cannot wrap my mind around these kinds of people who continue to develop sexual and inappropriate relationships with children. It disgusts me to no end and every single one of them are without question sick in the head. These are children who are entrusted in our care as educators by their families with the belief that we will take care of them, protect them, nurture them and keep them safe. Yet every time something like this happens it completely erodes at the goodwill developed by countless dedicated professionals who work tirelessly everyday for the greater good.

I think the VAST majority of educators feel the same.

Put it into perspective though, how many millions of educators are there and how statistically insignificant in comparison are the articles about this type of behavior that pop up now and again?

This is an issue with these white teachers lately. Is it something in the classrooms these days or what? Hopefully, every teacher out there will see this and learn from her encounter with minors. if you are in need of sex that bad, hell find another teacher or go to the principles office, lock the door and get your groove in. You may lose your job, but I assure you, you will not be charged, convicted, sent to jail, have to register as a sex offender and not be able to teach for the rest of your life. Teachers wake up and teach our future and keep your g strings on.

There is one of these stories at least once a week. Go back 30 years and nothing would have been done, but now you are going to go to jail, be placed on the sex offenders registry, and you will be barred from your profession for life.

I really don't understand why it continues to happen.

Her biggest mistake was that she thought it was OK for a teacher at a Christian school to have sex with a student while that is strictly reserved for members of the clergy.

So your trying to say that this woman shouldn't be in trouble for having sex with an under age student?

I'm not sure what specific situation you're talking about with the drug user stealing stuff, but that doesn't really have much to do with this.

This woman is a sex offender! She had sex with a 15 year old. Who was her student.
