Pastor accused of child molestation free on bond

Wiley Leverett

Krystal Riner/Managing Editor • Sat, Dec 07, 2013

A Centerville pastor accused of child molestation was granted a $25,000 bond on Thursday.

Wiley Leverett pleaded not guilty during a hearing before Houston County Superior Court Judge Katherine Lumsden.

Leverett is ordered to wear an electronic monitoring device while on bond, and Lumsden said he should not have any contact with children under 18.

William Noland, Leverett's attorney, held up a stack of letters written by friends and family saying that Leverett is an honest man.

Leverett is accused of molesting four girls over the past two years – ages 8, 12, 14 and 15.

Prosecutor Mark Anthony said Leverett has a van to give children rides to church. He said Leverett is accused of reaching over and touching the children on their thighs and genitals.

As part of Leverett's bond conditions he is allowed to be at church and to preach as long as he is not in contact with children, according to the judge.

According to the Houston County jail records Leverett was arrested Monday. He is charged with three counts of child molestation, four counts of sexual battery and one count of aggravated sexual battery.

Leverett is the owner of Leverett's Auto Sales and the pastor of Solid Rock Community Church.
